Highlights

.I Create Safar- Newly Trained Entrepreneurs as competent judges

The CMS program that was conducted by I Create Safar for Regional Vocational Training Institute for Women at Dadar, gave the directors, Venkatesh and Tejaswini, a memorable experience on this International Women's Day, March 8, 2013.

When two of the appointed judges failed to show up due to some last minute exigencies, the directors found themselves in a bind. They immediately contacted the earlier batch from RVTI (this was the batch whose presentation was witnessed by Harsh and Aruna too) and asked, "Who is willing to act as a judge for today's presentation?" Four hands went up – and they selected those four to do the Judging.

The girls behaved like judges, listened to all the presentations, clinically observed each and every presenter and made note of critical points during the presentations. They posed questions to the team but clearly directed them to the person who had actually spoken about the point during the presentation. Arithmetical inaccuracies were not the only ones questioned even on marketing. Every question was to the point and clearly led to the sustainability of the business idea. They adopted the method of CRC (Comment, Recommend and Conclude with Comments). The directors of IC-Safar had tears in their eyes. They were so proud of the girls. The girls had done an outstanding job. This event clearly underscored the fact that the girls had integrated the knowledge they had imbibed during the training.

This article is also to be treated as a call for more features from all the centers!
